Like so many, I'm sure, I am shocked to be writing this message of condolence to you, Bill and Jim. I can't think of one of you without thinking of the three of you and memories of being schoolmates and neighbors as kids; I can close my eyes and hear you guys out in your yard. I am sorry for the sadness and shock you must be feeling at this loss. May wonderful memories you will recount in coming days ease your pain and grieving.Larry and I send our sympathies to you and all your families as you mourn Bobby's passing. There's something moving about reading through memories like these—little snapshots of someone's life that linger. It reminds me how film and stories do the same thing, freezing moments that keep people alive in a different way. I actually wrote something recently about that feeling and how streaming platforms capture it through storytelling—how scenes, like memories, stay with us.
